PayPal was founded in 1998 by Max Lucchini and Peter Teal, originally under the name Confinity. The original idea of the company was an international currency that was beyond government control. PayPal was initially exploited by hackers and white collar and cyber criminals due to its novelty and unfamiliarity, and many used it as a method of money laundering. In the early months of PayPal's operations, the US government banned the company from doing business. In 2000, eBay executives realized that many of their users were using the PayPal logo on their auction pages to obtain money from customers. Therefore, eBay also included this service in its payment methods and provided facilities for it. The move by eBay led to a dramatic increase in PayPal usage, and within two months, the number of PayPal users increased from 100,000 to one million.
